The OECD Better Life Initiative

Romina Boarini

Head of the Monitoring Well-being and Progress team, Statistics Directorate

Conference “Happiness and Profit”, 12 June 2012, St. Gallen

The starting point...

- GDP is a key measure to monitor macro- economic activity, productivity, demand for paid-jobs
- GDP is not a metric for people's well-being, it ignores non-market activities, inequalities, sustainability
- Measuring well-being implies confronting value : from “treasuring what you measure” to “measuring what you treasure”

The OECD work on measuring well-being and progress

- Started 10 years ago: 3 World Fora, Global Project
- Input to the Stiglitz-Sen-Fitoussi Commission
- Last year: launch of the OECD Better Life Initiative
- Main goal: to build a GPS of societal progress
i.e. information system that
 - Goes beyond the market
 - Goes beyond the average
 - Goes beyond “here and now”

The OECD Better Life Initiative

Moving to measuring what matters most in PEOPLE's life

OECD@50: Better policies for better lives

Focus

- Households and people, not just GDP
- Outcomes, not inputs or outputs
- Assessing inequalities alongside averages
- Including both objective and subjective aspects of well-being

The OECD well-being framework

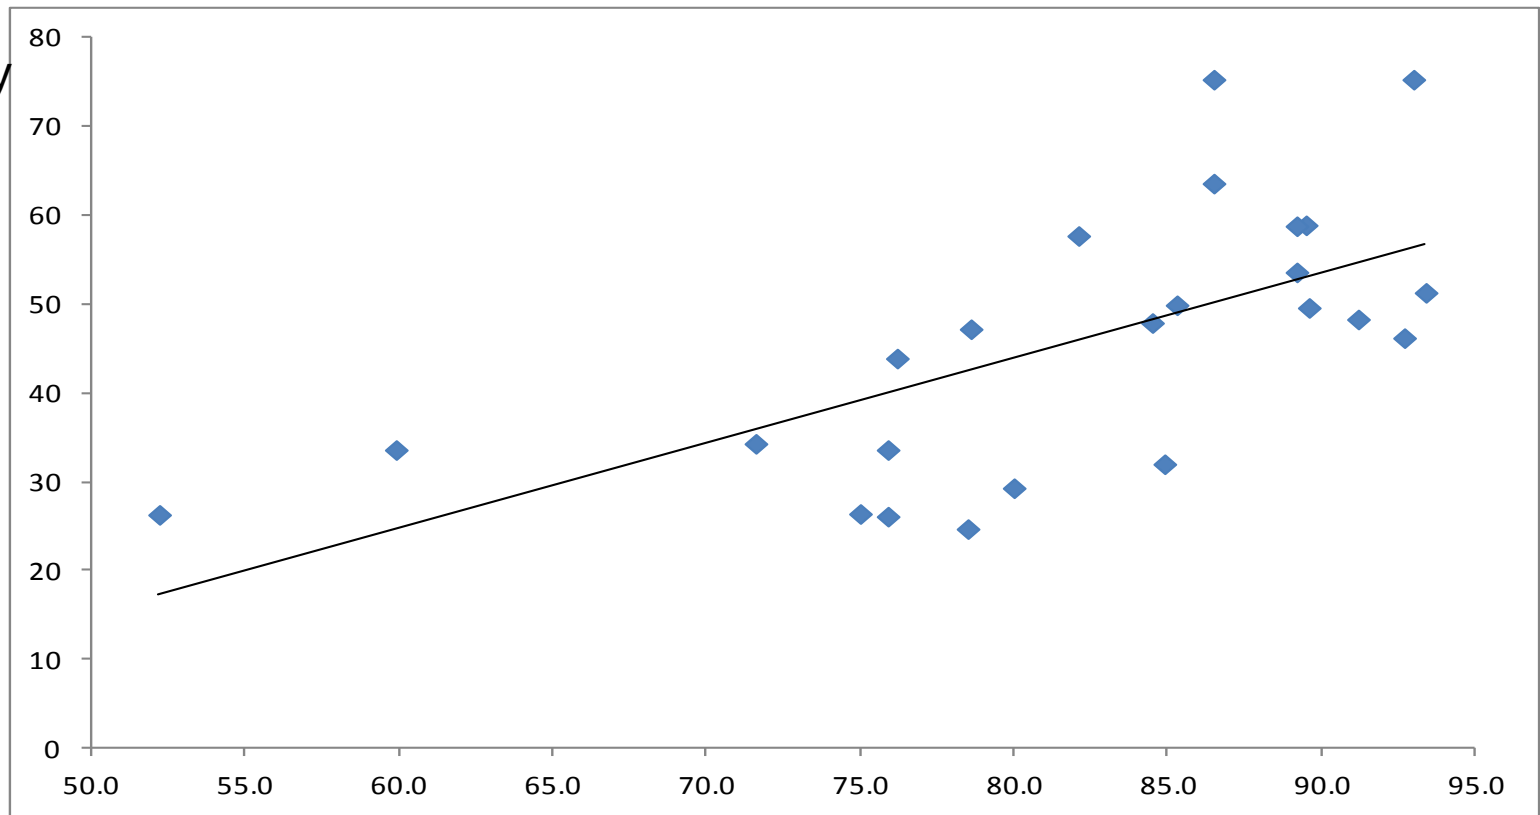

A few highlights from How's Life

- Average living standards and quality of life increased during the past 15 years in the large majority of OECD countries
- There are however significant inequalities in all well-being dimensions and the largest inequalities are the socio-economic ones
- Friends, good health and not being unemployed are the most important factors behind people's life satisfaction
- There is no unique well-being champion, but some countries (Australia, Canada, Nordic European countries) do very well in many dimensions

Quality of jobs is an important determinant of well-being (1)

Involving the public

- Engaging with civil society has been one of the goals of the OECD-hosted Global Project

- How's Life? is accompanied by interactive web tool (Your Better Life Index) aimed at involving the public

- The global HUB of initiatives measuring progress
- A community of nearly 90 partners
- Three thematic wikis: progress, gender, child
- Services:
 - Progress information (country, topic, publications, events)
 - Progress data
 - On-line discussions, blogs, e-briefs, newsletters
 - Research Network
- Impact: 1.6 million visitors, 3.5 min on average, more than 100 000 average monthly visits in 2012; 3000 editors
